

Abstract

The invention proposes, during manufacture of a chip card, storing a public key of the subsequent purchaser of the card in the ROM. During initialization, the authenticity of the introduced data can then be checked on the basis of a signature. If the check has a negative result, initialization of the chip card is terminated.